

In a quest for Nala, you go to Scrooge for a sound system. I didn't get a screenshot (if you have one, please share), but Scrooge says he has a sound system in the basement that he thinks belonged to someone Goofy used to know. Who do you think this is referencing?

If that's what your friend is going to judge a game on (and what an odd thing to show to get someone into the game) I'm pretty sure I'm not terribly worried. Who judges a game on a sound effect of one single weapon.

The predator has a different sound than most rifles in the game and I, for one, like that sound.

goofy ahh download sound

Download > <https://socvy.com/2A4X51>

I don't show people a character and some combat. I usually show them a world boss or something more like that. Still to poo poo the game over one single sound seems judgmental to me. To blame the sound, a sound that some people really like, is even more silly. I can't imagine a single sound that would have stopped me from enjoying any game, and normally I wouldn't have judged a game based on that. It's just very shallow in my opinion.

I am a bit confused, you showed your friend your character with a legendary which has CUSTOM sound effects. He dislikes those sound effects which are UNIQUE to that legendary. You do not change skins to show him that regular gun fire sound effects are different?

and in case you didn't know or get from that above _Predator has custom sound effects and animations which differ from other rifles. As most legendary items do. So your friend basically judged the entire game around 1 weapon sound. Now if it was Quip, I would have understood the reaction, but over this? ?

As for the gun sound effects I suspect they made them silly in order to keep the game's rating lower than mature in some regions. I bet "realistic guns" is a criteria for the mature rating tag, somewhere. Politicians will do anything to be elected, so if strict game rating systems are fashionable Anet needs to anticipate politicians copying each other and passing ignorant laws. Besides there are plenty of shooters with ultra realistic guns. There are even a few that have created, and patented, gun designs that would work irl if a manufacturer decided to buy the design.

I can understand one factor influencing your initial interest in a game, I first got interested in GW1 because I saw the charr, but that wasn't enough to make up my mind, just to ask for more information. Giving up on a game you were considering playing because of one effect seems odd. My first impression based on your story is that your friend had no intention of playing GW2 but didn't want to turn you down immediately so he watched what you wanted to show him looking for any excuse to say he didn't like it.

But if you think he really was put off by the special sound effects unique to 1 skin the first step is to demonstrate how other rifles sound (with the Predator you can do this easily because you can reskin it for free) and show him that you can disable other players unique item sounds (and your own) so he doesn't need to hear the one he doesn't like.

Mod replaces every single boss song with something new Many sound effects is also replaced with mostly stock cartoon effects. Majority of enemies have at least one sound changed. Some just death sounds, others have larger total overalls. From Daffy Duck, to Goofy Angels, it has it all.

-Sometimes the audio don't work properly like audio static at the end of some of the sounds or destroying one part of your ear, cannot really fix it you may just have to restart the game if it persists for long because it's that inconsistent whether or not it wants to break or not. Just be warned.

1.1.0: Added and removed various sounds so if you installed this mod manually, you should remove the previous version. Idk if mod managers delete old versions of mod to replace with new ones but i'd recommend doing so anyway.

Discover hundreds of funny instants sounds, dank memes, sound effect, music soundboard buttons for discord, Free Downloadand create your own sound buttons in the best soundboard website in the United States

Goofy Ahh is an AAVE phrase and slang term meaning "goofy ass" used to label content as goofy or silly. The related phrase "goofy ahh sound" became popular on TikTok in early 2022 as a spam comment, often used on videos where the original sound contains goofy sound effects associated with the 21st Century Humor, including cartoon sound effects and indiscernible noises.

The exact origin of the term "goofy ahh" is unknown but has been used online since as early as 2009 on Twitter.[1] The pronunciation is likely inspired by AAVE. The term became increasingly popular on TikTok in late 2021, accelerated when TikToker @proddadood started posting "goofy ahh remixes" of popular songs. The account posted its first "goofy ahh remix," a remix of "Range Brothers," to TikTok[2] on September 30th, 2021, gaining over 932,000 views in five months (shown below).

The phrase "goofy ahh sound" is a popular spam comment on TikTok, used in videos with original sounds that contain cartoon sound effects and similarly goofy or ridiculous sounds. For example, on December 19th, 2021, TikToker[3] @baileef_ posted a "21st Century Humor": compilation consisting of a sound containing multiple cartoon sound effects, gaining over 900,000 views in two months and numerous comments of "goofy ahh sound" (shown below).

A sound effect of someone snoring loudly,[4] known as "AUUUGHHHHH" on TikTok, often inspires "goofy ahh sound" comments when it's used. The effect has been implemented into numerous sounds, including the My Name Is Carmen Winstead sound popular in February 2022 (examples shown below).

Birding blogger Nick Lund, also known as The Birdist, picked out some of the weirdest-sounding birds for NPR. His top five choices include the Atlantic Puffin, Bald Eagle, American Bittern, Northern Barred Owl, and Willow Ptarmigan.

dc9ddb2f52